The 2022 Legislative Interim has been one of the busiest on record, especially around the discussion of mental health. Several committees were charged with looking at the mental health system and services in Texas leading up to the next legislative session. Due to multiple special sessions in 2021, the legislative interim is significantly shorter than in more traditional times, meaning committees have a compressed window to tackle interim charges. And with the unimaginable tragedy that struck the small community of Uvalde, Texas, the political and policy priority landscape changed overnight.

In response to the Uvalde school shooting, Gov. Greg Abbott asked the Legislature to convene special committees in both chambers to examine topics related to school safety, mental health, social media, police training, and firearm safety. Gov. Abbott also directed the Texas Health and Human Services Commission (HHSC) to provide behavioral health resources and care coordination apparatus for the Uvalde area. Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Patrick created the Senate Special Committee to Protect All Texans.

Meanwhile, the Texas medical community came together quickly following the Uvalde shooting. The Texas Medical Association (TMA) convened a “mental health rapid response team” led by TMA President, Dr. George Floyd, with Dr. Phillip Ballfanz participating on behalf of the Federation. The group is looking at ways to further assist Uvalde, and policy and programmatic priorities for consideration in the 2023 legislative session, as well as coordination with state health care leadership. HHSC has a robust response team well-positioned to respond to this kind of tragedy, with an array of community mental health resources and care coordination apparatus to assist communities. State efforts include:

- A $5.8 million investment to establish the Texas Child Health Access Through Telemedicine (TCHATT) statewide
- A $4.7 million HHSC grant to increase Multisystemic Therapy (MST) across the state
- A $500,000 to HHSC to expand Coordinated Specialty Care (CSC) teams across the state
- A $5 million will be used by the Hill Country Mental Health & Developmental Disabilities Center to assist in evaluating mental health services in the Uvalde community and preparing a needs assessment for the legislature.

To date, House and Senate committees have conducted hearings, including in the community of Uvalde. When the Senate Committee met on June 22nd, Dr. Celeste Caballero, a pediatrician, testified on behalf of TMA, the Federation of Texas Psychiatrists, Texas Pediatric Society, and the Texas Academy of Family Physicians, among others. A psychiatrist with Dell Children’s Medical Center, Dr. Roshni Koli, also testified. The focus was on opportunities to strengthen the state’s mental health system but also clinical and community intervention. Witnesses pointed out that:

- The strain from the pandemic — compounded by recent tragedies — have contributed to rising rates of Texas needing mental health treatment.
- Too many patients cannot access treatment due to a strained mental health system and workforce, high rates of uninsured, and network inadequacy.
- Gun violence, including rising rates of suicide among adults and children, stems from many factors, but some include

In 2019, 13% of teenagers reported having a major depressive episode. In data from the CDC, in 2018 we saw an increase of suicide rates in the 10 to 24 age group increase by almost 60%.

And this was prior to the pandemic.

“toxic” stress, enduring childhood adversity, and a frayed health and community safety net that leaves many children and families without the health care and social services they need to overcome them. Supporting proven child, family and community interventions paired with augmented investments in health and social services can help reduce violence by promoting healthy, nurtured, and resilient children and families.

Across these hearings, increasing access to psychiatry is a common theme. Nearly every county in Texas has a shortage of psychiatrists and other mental health professionals with several counties having no psychiatrists at all. The Senate Committee discussed extensively ways to connect general practitioners to psychiatrists, as well as increasing the numbers of psychiatrists.

In 2019, the Legislature created the Texas Child Mental Health Care Consortium with an initial investment of $100M and repeated that investment of $100M in 2021. This allowed the Consortium to launch several initiatives leveraging resources between health-related institutions, primary care providers, and the psychiatry community to improve the mental health delivery system for children and adolescents. As a part of these efforts, the Child Psychiatry Access Network (CPAN) connects primary care physicians with a Pediatric psychiatry or mental health clinic utilizing telemedicine technology to help address a patient’s mental and behavioral health issues through training, consultation, and care coordination from a team approach. Physicians looking to enroll in CPAN can visit https://tcmhcc.utsystem.edu/cpan/ and physicians looking for CPAN assistance can call 1-888-901-2726.

In addition, the Consortium administers the TCHATT which provides telemedicine or telehealth programs to school districts to help identify and assess the behavioral health needs of children and adolescents and provide access to mental health services. TCHATT is not available to all students across Texas yet, but the program’s web assistance can call 1-888-901-2726. At the statewide level, key races included the Texas Senate, where Republicans are likely to remain in control when the Legislature convenes in January. The Texas Senate is presently composed of 19 Republicans and 12 Democrats. While we can’t predict the election results, the Senate sees a final split of 19-12 favoring the GOP. The Texas House has a partisan split of 86 Republicans and 64 Democrats with the GOP likely picking up a few new seats. However, these changes will likely not cross any procedural threshold that would change how the two chambers operate.

The state’s fiscal posture continues to improve. On July 14th, Comptroller Glenn Hegar released a revised revenue estimate after months of historic economic growth in Texas. The Comptroller projects the Legislature will have an ending balance for Fiscal Year 2023 (ends August 31st, 2023) of $26.95 billion. The previous estimate was $12 billion. The Economic Stabilization Fund (or “Rainy Day” Fund) is estimated to have a balance of $13.66 billion at the end of the fiscal year. While the revised estimate feels like a windfall for the Legislature and budget writers, Comptroller Hegar has cautioned the Legislature that this revised estimate is subject to change and economic factors of rising costs, inflation, supply chain issues, workforce struggles, global issues, and much more.

State agencies are preparing their Legislative Appropriations Requests (LARs). Each agency will submit their funding request for the upcoming biennium (2024-2025) including any exceptional items, which are special item requests for additional funding above the baseline. We anticipate these LARs to be released starting in August.

Given the revenue surplus, the balance of the Rainy Day Fund, and approximately $3 billion of remaining federal funds tied to the American Rescue Plan Act of 2021, we anticipate a number of policy areas receiving significant attention for appropriations: property tax relief, border crisis, cost overruns on state related investments and projects, infrastructure, a $4 billion to $5 billion Medicaid shortfall, and state employee pay raises. Other significant policy issues facing lawmakers are sure to include foster care system, water & infrastructure investment, electricity reforms, Medicaid coverage post-partum, border security, abortion in a post-Dobbs world, and gender affirming care. As always, thank you for allowing us to be your voice at the Texas Capitol.

In 2019, the Legislature created the Texas Child Mental Health Care Consortium with an initial investment of $100M and repeated that investment of $100M in 2021. This allowed the Consortium to launch several initiatives leveraging resources between health-related institutions, primary care providers, and the psychiatry community to improve the mental health delivery system for children and adolescents.

Senate Health and Human Services Committee will consider one of the most important interim charges - health care workforce shortages - at the August 23rd hearing. There have been discussions across the mental and behavioral health advocacy community to increase funding to the mental health loan repayment program, bringing parity between this program and the physician loan repayment program. We have been working with Sen. Royce West, who has expressed interest in carrying this funding request before the Legislature.

On the election front, Texas voters went to the polls to cast their ballots on May 24th in the state’s 2022 primary runoff election. At the statewide level, key races included Attorney General, Land Commissioner, and Railroad Commission. While Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick faces challenger Mike Collier in November, he is likely to remain in control of the Texas Senate. Gov. Abbott, of course, will face former U.S. Rep. Beto O’Rourke. Incumbent Attorney General Ken Paxton overwhelmingly defeated General Land Commissioner George P. Bush. In the Democratic primary runoff, Rochelle Garza fought off challenger, Joe Jaworski. Senator Dawn Buckingham, a physician, prevailed against Dr. Tim Westley and will face Jay Kleberg in November for the General Land Office. Comptroller Glen Hegar does have a challenger in November, Janet Dudding, but it is unlikely he will lose this seat.

The Senate will have six new senators when the Legislature convenes in January. The Texas Senate is presently composed of 18 Republicans and 13 Democrats. While we can’t predict the election results, the Senate sees a final split of 19-12 favoring the GOP. The Texas House has a partisan split of 86 Republicans and 64 Democrats.
